

A clerk who reconciles two ledgers learns to distrust the word agreement, because the ledgers do agree, eventually, and the agreement is never the thing anybody wanted to know. What the harbour wants to know is which berth is free this afternoon, and no reconciliation answers that.